ABOUT THE BOOK

Are you ready to take a trip to Angel Bayou, Louisiana, where the food is spicy and the woo-woo is strong?

You'll meet Cajun beauty Reese Soublet LeBlanc, who's busy raising her toddler, running the family-owned funeral parlor, and staying one step ahead of the ghosts of her Soublet foremothers. Remember Chase Callahan, the country music star hopeful who first turned up in Forgiving Jackson? He's back—and he's not a hopeful anymore. He's set the whole country on fire with his good looks and hot music, and Reese is feeling the heat.

Deep in Cajun country, the dead don't stay quiet at the Last Wish Motel — and the meddling Soublet ghosts have a habit of matchmaking their descendants, wanted or not.

Reese Soublet LeBlanc traded a basketball scholarship to Duke for single motherhood after one reckless night. Now she paints caskets, orders embalming fluid, and tries to keep her ancestors' ghosts in line at the family-owned Peaceful Rest Funeral Parlor.

Chase Callahan is a country music star who swore he'd never come back to Angel Bayou. But his aunt's funeral drags him home — straight into the path of a toddler with his eyes.

Co-parenting? Fine. Falling for each other? Not a chance.

But this is Angel Bayou, where the gumbo is spicy, the ghosts are stubborn, and love has a way of getting the last word.

Secret baby. Enemies to lovers. Matchmakers. Country music star. Humorous small-town paranormal romance with a Southern kick!

ABOUT ALICIA HUNTER PACE

USA Today Bestselling Author

Stephanie Jones and Jean Hovey write together as Alicia Hunter Pace. Stephanie lives in Tuscaloosa, AL, where she teaches school and wishes for a bigger bookstore. She is a native Alabamian who likes football, American history, and people who follow the rules. She is happy to provide a list of said rules to anyone who needs them.

Jean, a former public librarian, lives in Decatur, AL, with her husband in a hundred-year-old house that always wants something from her. She likes to cook but has discovered the joy of Mrs. Paul's fish fillets since becoming a writer. Stephanie and Jean are both active members in the romance writing community. They write contemporary romantic comedy. They love to hear from readers.
